this book reassesses the idea that islamic objects in seventeenth century italy were considered mere curiosities sparking no cultural or historical interest it focuses on italy s largest collection of islamic artefacts of the time assembled by the medici agent and bolognese nobleman ferdinando cospi in his public gallery the cospi museum through an extensive investigation of inventories letters and archival documents the book follows the objects through the various paths which took them from the eastern shores of the mediterranean through north african cities to livorno florence and finally bologna these paths reveal the presence of a network of enslaved turks arab scholars egyptian fishermen and armenian merchants all responsible for importing both the items and their stories biographies and anecdotes to italy the book thus brings forward to the seventeenth century a phenomenon of cultural inquisition that was thought to start only a century later vasari s lives of the painters sculptors and architects are and always have been central texts for the study of the italian renaissance they can and should be read in many ways since their publication in the mid sixteenth century they have been a source of both information and pleasure their immediacy after more than four hundred years is a measure of vasari s success he wished the artists of his day himself included to be famous he made the association of artistry and genius of renaissance and the arts so familiar that they now seem inevitable in this book patricia rubin argues that both the inevitability and the immediacy should be questioned to read vasari without historical perspective results in a limited and distorted view of the lives rubin shows that vasari had distinct ideas about the nature of his task as a biographer about the importance of interpretation judgment and example about the historian s art vasari s principles and practices as a writer are examined here as are their sources in vasari s experiences as an artist
